2009 began with bang with the release of "Cold War." Simultaneously, the band unveiled their Nintendo Wii Guitar. The invention, which contributes to the band's unique sound and stage antics, was featured in The Boston Globe, The Phoenix, Gizmodo, and received international press attention.

Praise for Vivian Darkbloom:

"Cold War," if there were any justice in the music biz, would be on heavy rotation."

— SecretlyIronic.com

"[Rob Morris] writhes and twists in histrionic rock form in front of the sizable crowd, skipping octaves, bending pitches, casting vibrato — hell, he's producing sounds you didn't even know were sounds."

— Abigail Jones, The Phoenix

"[Cold War] could be the lyric of the year: It's morose. It's crushing. It's actually a little funny. To summarize: it's every disastrous interaction you've ever had with women."

— 32ft/sec

"Vivian Darkbloom offers a subtly unique species of alternative rock, kitschy and catchy, but with staying power... dark-tinged alternative with absorbing lyrics and simple, powerful guitar riffs"

— Christine Broomhead, CMJ

"Vivian Darkbloom is Boston's hot new band. They're young, creative, and really good"

— Ryan's Smashing Life
